Robert Steinman is a counsel in our MT>iplus, division, focusing exclusively on immigration law.

After being called to the Quebec Bar in 2009, Robert focused on various aspects of commercial and banking law, including film and television finance transactions for productions across Canada, the United States and Europe.

He began his career in immigration law at a boutique business immigration law firm in Montreal, thereafter launching his own solo immigration practice, handling a variety of matters including work permits, permanent residence applications and citizenship matters. In managing his own practice, Robert became proficient in managing every aspect of an immigration matter and at advising clients on longer-term mobility strategies.

Robert joins McCarthy Tétrault after working at a large Montreal-based business law firm, spending a few years as a member of its full-service business immigration department, where he gained extensive expertise advising small, medium-sized and large corporations on a wide variety of immigration matters, from permanent residence matters to temporary immigration, particularly intracompany transfers and labour market impact assessment applications, among many others. He gained particular expertise in advising companies in the telecommunications and information technology fields.

His passion has become helping clients grow by assisting them in every facet of their global mobility strategies.
