Stephanie is an associate in our Litigation group. She works predominantly on behalf of First Nations communities, organizations, and individuals in large-scale class actions, representative actions, and commercial matters. She also maintains a communications practice, with extensive experience in Indigenous broadcasting and privacy disputes. Stephanie has appeared as counsel in all levels of court, including the Court of Appeal of Ontario and Supreme Court of Canada.

Stephanie successfully represented First Nations communities and their members in a historic class proceeding against the federal government regarding the drinking water crisis on reserves. This resulted in one of the largest settlements in Canadian history, valued at more than $8 billion. This ground-breaking agreement provided compensation to hundreds of First Nations and their members, together with commitments going forward to build the water infrastructure that communities require.

Stephanie is currently representing Indigenous communities and individuals in claims related to housing deficits, child welfare, treaty annuities, and police carding practices.

Stephanie completed a secondment as Senior Legal Counsel at the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. In this role, she worked on a variety of mandates, including a public policy hearing regarding connectivity and infrastructure deficits in First Nations in northern Canada. Stephanie is a leader in the Indigenous telecommunications and broadcasting spaces, with extensive experience working with regulatory bodies and media platforms. She also has experience representing parties in appeals from regulatory decisions. Stephanie serves on the Board of
