

Speaker 1: I think we would be headed for another kind of mini trade war. And, you know, one of the lessons we learned there, I think one of the lessons the business community learned during that trade war was that innocent parties are punished during in those in those situations... From a business perspective, when you see this coming, I think you need to be prepared that it could be your imports that get sideswiped. And there's there's very few Canadian companies here or manufacturers that are not importing in one way or another from the United States or other jurisdictions. So the risk of being sideswiped is quite high during these these trade wars.
